

Summary

Method for scanner control in at least one scan axis in a laser scanning microscope, the scan field being divided into partial area, a first image of at least one partial area produced by a forward scan being compared with a second image of the partial area produced by a back scan and a correction value for the scanner control determined from the deviation between the first and second image.